U.K. Policy Dispute Is Reported

Jobs of Top 2 Thatcher Aides Believed to Be in Danger

Unuted Frees International
LONDON — Prime Minister
Margaret Thatcher and her two top ministers are engaged in a bitter behind-the-scenes policy dispute over the war in the Falkland MLI (VA MINA) islands, according to news reports and political sources. News reports Monday said that Defense Minister John Nott and Foreign Secretary Francis Pym, both of whom rose to prominence because of the Falklands conflict, have lost Mrs. Thatcher's esteem because of policy disagreements.

Mr. Nott's aides conceded that be will probably be removed as defense minister and put in another post before Mrs. Thatcher begins an expected investigation into how Britain failed to prevent Argentina

Mr. Pvm has not modified his position despite continued criti-

"We have made it clear," Mr. Pym said last month, "that we remain prepared to negotiate with Argentina about the long-term fu-ture of the islands." He said that Britain is "ready to discuss anything which either side might wish to put forward."

Opposition Labor Party leader Michael Foot urged Mrs. Thatcher on Monday to continue to seek negotiations, but, according to The Times and political sources, the prime minister feels that "this smacks of sellout, and she will have nothing to do with it." Three other members of the Foreign Office are also believed to be in danger of losing their jobs.

Patriotic Ad Campaign On Wane in Argentina

> By Dial Torgerson Los Angeles Times Service

BUENOS AIRES — A multim-illion-dollar propaganda campaign to convince Argentines that "we shall win" was winding down this week into a few painfully terse words admitting deleats on the islands known here as the Malvinas.

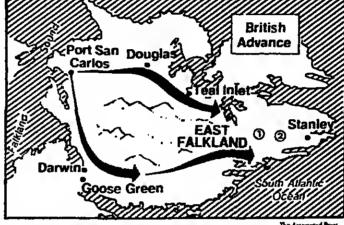

The campaign, launched in early April to inspire patriotic fervor, continued Monday with catchy tunes and heroic slogans on radio and television, at movie houses and on T-shirts and wall posters,

But the news now is grim, and the military command finds it hard to explain defeat. The command dismissed the loss of the first land battle on the Falkland Islands with one word — the British were "es-tablished" at Darwin, it said and instead claimed a victory at claimed an attack by Argentine planes on the British fleet in which an Argentine missile was said to have damaged the carrier Invincible. "An attack never equaled in the annals of war," one article called it. But the Defense Ministry in Loodon denied that the Invincible had even been hit.

The military command made no mennon of the British claim of capturing 1,400 Argentine troops at Darwin over the weekend.

Late Saturday, a junta communique said that, at midday Friday, 800 Argentines in the Darwin area had been attacked by 2,500 British troops and then radio contact was broken. Did Argentines assume that their men had all died in the Uruguayan radio stations also broadcest the London stories. Of Argentina's 2b million people, about 10 million live in the Buenos Aires area, within easy range of Montevideo stations, Others listen to the BBC or the Voice of Ameri-ca on shortwave. Word of what the British say is happening seeps

"I don't read the newspapers," said a Buenos Aires resident. José Isador Perez, "but I heard about Darwin Sunday on Montevideo radio. Today I went down to the office of La Nación to find out what was happening."
But the bulletins posted in the windows of the newspaper office were mostly about the attack on the Invincible.

The Argentine press, quoting military sources, has put the other British carrier, the Hermes, out of action several times. London sources have consistently denied such reports.

"The military is damaging its own credibility," an Argentine ad-vertising executive said. "Have you Probably not. While Argentine seen the poster that says, The radio and television give little news Malvinas can never be negotiated? of what the British say, the news-papers print wire-service accounts negotiated some day. people think when the time comes to negotiate?"

A major advertising firm directed the propaganda campaign, with two other firms as consultants. Argentines have gotten used to seeing maps of "our Malvinas" every-where — on shirts, pins, posters, flashed on television screens beon the ceiling at the planetarium

During a showing here of the British film "Chariots of Fire," a scene showing a heroic race by a British athlete was interrupted while everyone stood to sing the national anthem and see the inkblot-shaped map of "our Malvi-nas" projected on the screen.

Russians Are Skeptical On Arms Negotiations, U.S. Senator Reports By John Burns New York Times Service

MOSCOW - Sen, Larry Pressler said Tuesday that be found "a great deal of skepncism" about the prospects for a new strategic arms agreement between the Soviet Uo-ion and the United States when he met earlier in the day with Viktor P. Karpov, the Foreign Ministry official named Monday to head the Soviet delegation at talks in Geneva beginning June 29.

Sen, Pressier, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Commit-tee's subcommittee on arms con-trol, said that Mr. Karpov and other senior Soviet officials sharply questioned President Reagan's sincerity in agreeing to the new talks and in calling for reductions in the two sides' strategic arsenals. In particular, the South Dakota Republican said, the Soviet officials said that they considered it "not a very realistic judgment at all" to expect a new pact before the end of Mr. Reagan's current presidential term in January, 1985.

'A 10-Year Job'

Sen. Pressler, a strong supporter of Mr. Reagan's military policies. said that the Soviet attitude seemed to be captured by a jesting remark made to Mr. Karpov by Viktor G. Komplektov, chief of the Foreign Ministry's American department. The senator said that after the Soviet officials had waved away his remarks about Mr. Reagan wanting an early agree-ment, perhaps in as little as 18 months, Mr. Komplektov turned to Mr. Karpov and said: "You've just got a 10-year job."

A skeptical tone also was struck in the first Soviet press commentary on the announcement of a starting date for the Geneva talks. Tass, in an article by its military affairs commentator, Vladimir Bogachyov, said that while Mr. Reagan's agreement to resume ne-gotiations was "a step in the right direction" it was to be hoped that it was not solely a gesture to pla-cate public opinion in advance of the president's trip to Western Europe, which begins Wednesday.

One should hope that the agreement of the United States to the resumption of talks with the USSR is caused not by fleeting political considerations, as has been the case more than once in the past, not by foreign trips by various American leaders and their desire to look better in the eyes of the world public, hut by sincere striv-ing to stop the world from sliding down to ouclear catastrophe." Tass said.

U.S. Commitment

On the positive side, the com-mentary welcomed Mr. Reagan's commitment that the United States will not undercut previous arms agreements with the Soviet Union so long as the Kremlin does the same. The commitment, issued in conjunction with the joint anfor the Geneva talks, amounted to a cootinuation of the administration's previous undertaking not to take actions contrary to the second Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty concluded in 1979 but never submitted to the U.S. Senate for ratifi-

Sen. Pressler said that Georgy A. Arbatov, director of the Insti-tute of the United States and Canada, the Kremlin's "think tank" on American affairs, had used the word "extremists" to describe President Reagan's team of arms negotiators, including Edward L. Rowny, named to head the strategic arms delegation in Geneva. But the senator said that Mr. Karpov, Mr. Rowny's opposite number, had said that the two men had "a great deal of mutual respect," despite past disagreements on arms control issues.

Mr. Karpov has been a member of Soviet negotiating teams since the two sides first met in Helsinki in 1969 at the outset of talks that produced the first Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty. He met Mr. Rowny, then an Air Force general, during negotiations that led to the SALT-2 treaty. Mr. Karpov headed the Soviet oegotiating team for most of the last year of those negotiations, while Mr. Rowny resigned from the U.S. delegation to make public his opposition to the pact just before President Jimmy Carter and Soviet President Leonid I.

Brezhnev signed it in Vienna.

Mr. Pressler said that he offered the Soviet officials his opinion that Mr. Reagan "could be to arms control what Richard Nixon was to China" - meaning that Mr. Reagan, as a conservative, might be able to win American public support for arms reduction policies that a more liberal president could not. But the senator said that the Soviet officials responded with expressions of doubt about the reliability of any negotiating commitments made by the president, in light of U.S. political uncertainties and the Senate's failure to ratify

Not to be outdone, Union Carbide Argentina, which owns two Eveready plants, offered $30,000 worth of flashlights and batteries to the Argentine troops. Federico A. Dodds, head of Union Carbide here, proudly posted in his factory a thank you note from Argentina's President Leopoldo Galtieri.

"With Argentine emotion, I received your offer of the donation by your firm, which adds your effort to the regaining of the Malvinas [Falkland] Islands for our national inheritance," Gen. Galtieri wrote to Mr. Dodds.

While Washington sends military supplies to aid Britain in the Falklands conflict, U.S. companies in Argentina, fearful about their economic future, are providing supplies, funds and moral support to the country's cause.

One U.S. food company donated $50,000 worth of cheese, bouilion cubes and candy to Argentine soldiers. "It would have been bad manners not to." said the company's president, who was solicited by an Argentine naval officer. "We look upon it as charity to the unfortunates who happen to be fighting. Besides, if I'd said no, have 3,000 Argentine employees mad as

The American Chamber of Commerce in Buenos Aíres, representing 500 U.S. companies, sent a telegram to President Reagan on May 12 condemning British efforts to for a "territory whose inhabitants were treated by the British in a way that, in the United States, would have been a violation of human rights."

The chamber, whose 20-member board includes executives of companies such as Citi-bank, Exxon, Goodyear, Coca-Cola and Warner-Lambert, wrote to Mr. Reagan that the British effort was a "malevolent cause." U.S. investment in Argentina reached $2.4 billion at the end of 1980, or 40 percent of all foreign investments here. Sourred by offshore oil exploration and financial investments to take advantage of a favorable exchange rate, U.S. interests here grew rapidly after the military government took power in 1976 and cracked down oo the guerrilla opposition movement. About $9 billioo of Argentina's $34-billion foreign debt is reportedly owed to U.S. banks.

However, while a few executives of U.S. companies here have traveled to New York and Washington to plead for U.S. centrality on the Falklands, there is little evidence that the headquarters of the multinational corporations are actively involved.

Does Exxon, which has large investments in Britain's North Sea, endorse the Chamber of Commerce telegram?

"We are a member of the chamber's board," said José Maria Cafferata, a spokesman for Esso Petrolera Argentina. "But that is a very difficult question to answer."

"Everyone knows the Malvinas are Argentina's," he said. "But, I wouldn't want to put my company's name on the telegram. Our invest-ment in England is 10 times what it is here and I'm sure my counterpart in England feels equally strongly."

One exception is the First National Bank of Boston, or Banco de Boston, the largest foreign bank in Argentina with 25 branches here. Ogden White, head of the bank's international operations, recently criticized "Great Britain's unusual display of belligerence and the Reagan administration's backing of the United Kingdom's position of reiterated intransigence The Boston bank's top executives have lob-bied for U.S. neutrality. Banco de Boston's general manager, Manuel Sacerdote, traveled to the United States at the Argentine government's request.

"But the reception was fairly cold," he said adding that the U.S. position could mean that Argentines would "decide they'd rather do business with a local bank." On May 12, a bomb exploded in the bank's Quilmes branch but did not hurt anyone.

As anti-American sentiment grows following Argentine setbacks on the Falklands, a grassroots boycott movement against British and American products is gathering strength. U.S. exports to Argentina in 1981 were about $2 billion, or 22 percent of the export market ment and Security Issues headed by former Swedish Premier Olof Palme, presented the commission's report at a press conference.

Its primary suggestion is "the establishment of a zone free of ouclear battle weapons, reaching from Central Europe into the corthern and southernmost tips of the Warsaw Pact and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. The report proposed that this zone could be established in stages, beginning with the creation of a nuclear-free area 93 miles (150 kilometers) either side of the current the two alliances" dividing Europe,

There would be no ouclear weapons deployed in this zone or used in maneuvers, the report said. It also excluded any preparations for missile deployment. Such a zone would make the first use of ouclear weapons in a European war "practically impos-sible," Mr. Bahr said.

Mr. Bahr is a leading security adviser in the ruling Social Demo-cratic Party in West Germany. Other commission members in-cluded former U.S. Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance, former British Foreign Secretary David Owen and the head of Moscow's Academy for U.S.-Canadian studies, Georgi A. Arbatov, who is also a member of the Central Committee of the Soviet Communist Party.

in advance of this month's United Nations special session on disar-mament, Mr. Bahr said he hoped the session would take note of the proposals, worked out in a series of meetings of the 16-member commission over the past 18

The report noted, however, that Mr. Arbatov had expressed doubts about the feasibility of such a nuclear-free zone. He suggested in-stead agreements that would reduce the quantity of nuclear arms in East and West.

Echoes of Peace Movement

Such suggestions were echoed throughoot the report, whose con-demnations of talk of a limited nuclear war recalled those used by the peace movement in Europe and the United States.

The idea of fighting a limited ouclear war is dangerous," the report said. "Nuclear weapons are oot weapons with which to fight a war." It went on to say, "It is ur-gently occessary to get rid of ouclear weapons.

The commission's report also called for a ban on all ouclear weapons tests and deployment of the ocutroo bomb, and the creation of a European zone free of chemical weapons.

It said it welcomed the superpower talks in Geneva begun Nov. 30 to reduce intermediate-range ouclear weapons in Europe.

The talks should aim to estabish "approximate parity" of these weapons in East and West "at the lowest possible level," the report said, and prevent the deployment of a new series of short-range ouclear weapons.

British Military Burial in Falklands Raises Issue of Where to Inter Dead

Los Angeles Times Service

LONDON - Cootroversy has arisen here over Britain's centuries-old practice of hurying soldiers where they fall in action.

Some people have suggested that the bodies of soldiers killed in the Falkland Islands fighting should be sent home for burial, but it appeared Monday that the authorities would adhere to precedent and bury them in the Falklands' rocky soil.

The conflict of views came to light as the Defense Ministry raised from I2 to 17 the number of men killed last week when the 2d Battalion of the Parachute Regiment attacked Argentine positions at Darwin and Goose Green.

Still pictures of simple, somber military burial rites for the men were shown on British television. Eventually, if past practice is followed, a military cemetery will be established on the Falklands. Michael Cork of Canterbury, the father of one of the dead troopers, Anthony Cork, 22, told a reporter here, "I want my boy brought home so he can be near his family. We, his family, should be able to say what we want and have our wishes respected. I am sure the families of the other boys feel like us."

Reports from British correspondents at the scene echoed Mr. Cork's sentiments. An unidentified company commander was quoted as saying, "The lads want the dead to go home.... The oation was quick enough getting us out here; it has a duty to get

But a Defense Ministry spokesman said that no change was contemplated in the traditional policy, which evolved in times of slow and uncertain transportation, that has left British soldiers' graves in almost every corner of the globe.

And this month, Mr. Reagan signed a sweeping national securi-ty directive establishing priorities in case of global conflict with the Russians. Aides say Mr. Reagan still spends about a third of his time on foreign policy - not much more than last year, But White House officials assert that be is more familiar with the issues and that Mr. Clark has improved the organization of the material, so that his time is better spent now.

Yet all is far from perfect, officials concede. One senior presidential appointee was seen wincing when Mr. Reagan joked at a recent dinner that the administration's policy on nuclear war was to install smoke detectors at the White House. His aides agree that he has yet to handle himself with complete confidence in public.

"He feels he has to be more cautions, restrained and controlled when he talks about foreign poliey," said a senior staff member. Mr. Reagan's off-hand comment last fall about the possibilities of a limited nuclear exchange in Europe touched off a furor overseas that forced him on the defensive

The president has learned to pay attention to public sentiment on arms control. In Europe, he is exne was the from day-to-day developments in pected to reiterate his willingness Begin of Israel

There is little doubt at the White House that Mr. Reagan's European trip will be his biggest foreign policy test to date. He will attend the economic conference at Versailles and a NATO summit in Bonn and along the way, will be giving speeches intended to change his image in some quarters abroad as "a cowboy, a flake or a rightwing nut," as one administration official put it.

Mr. Resgan's preparation for Versailles, in contrast to that for last year's summit in Ottawa, has been noticeably less frantic, reflecting broader administration experience and his growing understanding of the issues.

Presidents bave traditionally turned to foreign policy issues, and especially summitry, for relief from day-to-day domestic headaches. This has not generally been the case with Mr. Reagan, who entered office with what his supporters described as a mission to change the shape of domestic economic and social policies.

But there are signs that Mr. Reagan has been enjoying himself of late on foreign matters. Giving some Republicans assurances re cently about arms sales to the Mid-dle East, Mr. Reagan said, "Menachem and I exchange letters all the time on these subjects." His audience laughed in surprise at the homey reference to Prime Minister

Plager BirmingHAM, Ala. — Just as this predominantly black steel-inaking city was shedding its historic image as a haven for racism and becoming known as a center of Southern progress, the trend has been betrayed by a local service

The Rotary Club of Birmingham, whose membership of about 360 includes many of the most ims month to retain a rule restricting membership to white men. It is fone of only a few of the 19,600 Rotary clubs in the nation with such a policy.

The 130 powerful men in the state, voted

The 120-to-90 vote prompted several resignations. The Birming-barn News, one of the city's two daily newspapers, lambasted the Rotary Club for its action. And the board of directors of Rotary International, meeting last week in Boca Raton, Fla., voted unani-mously to ask the Birmingham club to reconsider its decision.

"Rotary stands for brotherhood and the betterment of mankind. but how can we do that when we can't sit down and have lunch with them?" asked Angus McEachran, bers May 10, urging them to sup-

42, the editor of The Birmingham Post-Herald. "This is the leader-ship of the community."

The Rotary membership at the time of the vote included the chairman of Southern Natural Resources, a gas utility; the president of the Alabama Power Co.; the president of the Coca-Cola bot-iling franchise; the head of the Merrill Lynch Pierce Fenner & Smith brokerage office; the super-intendent of public schools; the president of Samford University; a former president of Rotary Inter-national; the state's lieutenant governor, and the rector of the Episcopal Church of the Advent.

Mr. McEachran began lobbying for a change to the membership restrictions shortly after he was inducted into Rotary in 1978. The group's board of directors unanimously rejected his proposal twice, however, and the most recent rejection prompted Mr. McEachran to appeal to the full membership.

Many Rotarians fought vigor-ously against his call for a full membership vote. Eight past presidents of the Birmingham Rotary Club wrote a joint letter to mem-port the actions of the club's board of directors. The letter closed by declaring,

"The fact that it is even coming be fore the entire membership is not only damaging to our club, but also to our community." Mr. McEachran and several others, including U.S. District Judge J. Foy Guin, resigned after the vote on May 12, although only Mr.

McEachran made clear his reason for withdrawing membership.

Many Rotarians refused to discuss the club's vote. Several, such as Lt. Gov. George D.H. McMillan Jr., who is running for the Democratic nomination for gover-nor this year, and Wilmer S. Cody. superintendent of public schools expressed disappointment at the vote but said they would not resign until they could determine that the matter would not be reconsidered. Outside the club's ranks, other Birminghamians were trying to put the effect of the organization's decision into focus. "It's evidence that we still have some problems in Birmingham with respect to people who are different from one another," said Louis Willie, executive vice president of the Booker T. Washington and hungry for so long?

oned at 90 days, which, unhappily, is probably right. Afghanistan has all but slipped from sight. It is nine times 90 days since the Soviet Union flung its armies at an unaligned and unoffending neighbor. But still the war goes on. The Russians, incredibly, are no nearer victory than at the start, wheo experts blandly forecast that their modern army would subdue primitive tribesmen in months.

It is bigger news than a bored world realizes. The Soviet Union has but one short-term advantage: It can conceal from sight its humiliation. There are no free correspondents milling around in Kabul, as in San Salvador, and no casualty lists are published in Pravda, President Brezhnev can unroll the weariest clichés about British imperialism in the Falklands without fear of being mocked by a Soviet Russell Baker.

No one publicly described the Afghan capital on May I when it was torn by explosions. Who is there to record what is most conspicuously absent from Kabul - young men of draft age? Potential conscripts fled to the hills long ago to avoid being pressed into the sad rabble known as the Afghan Army. whose main achievement has been to provide arms and recruits to the resistance.

Tourism has ceased in Afghanistan, so no one can refute the claims of a "pacified" countryside. There is every reason to believe that the allegedly primitive rebels control everything outside the main cities and highways, that they are expert at bagging Soviet tanks and that they are forcing the

The world's attention span has been reck- baffled occupiers to rely more than ever on Hind helicopters, the big and murderous gunships that have become the brutal emblems of ungallant war.

Nor can journalists report how the battle is being pressed closer to Pakistan, whose camps are overflowing with more than 1.5 million refugees. In one of the world's largest recent population flights, a further 400,000 have moved to Iran. That, too, has slipped from the world's attention. Few realize that Afghans, not Palestinians, comprise the most numerous body of Islamic refugees.

Manifestly, after 30 months, the Soviet colonization of Afghanistan bas been a spectacular failure. The people of that traditionalist country are intractably hostile to communism; indeed, Moscow has failed even to curb the furious factionalism within the Afghan Communist Party. The leaders of the Kabul regime are rightly despised as quislings by the nonaligned nations.

Some Soviet diplomats admit privately that the occupation of Afghanistan was a blunder. They also concede that the local party in Kabul is a disaster and that Afghanistan will not really be pacified until its government has a broader base. But it may take a change of leadership in Moscow before Soviet policy can admit the error. When the mess can be blamed on men no longer in power, military and diplomatic retreat may finally be possible. Meanwhile, Afghanistan bleeds, its pain neglected, as the world's attention moves on.

For instance, it is said that Veneznela is especially angry these days with the United States, because Venezuela sided with Duarte in El Salvador. Duarte was beaten in the general elections, and Venezuela's support of him is, accord-ingly, betrayed. The implication is that the United States should have used the CIA, or whomever, to bribe Salvadorans to vote for Duarte even though they apparent-ly preferred the right-wing alterna-tive. But of course if the United States had entered El Salvador in a big way, it could now be criticized for "interfering," as it did in the affairs of Guatemala a generation ago and, to a lesser extent, in Chile in 1970, trying vainly to abort the catastrophic turn to Allende.

War to the Bitter End?

The pitch of battle in the Falklands lends scant encouragement to the idea that the war on the islands may stop short of total victory for the British and total defeat for the Argentines. Prime Minister Thatcher shows not the slightest readiness to stand up to her public and say that the long-term British interest would be better served by a negotiated settlement that gave the Argentines at least a slight opportunity to retrieve some pride. Whether she even believes it is a question.

In Argentina, it apparently has become impossible for any faction to suggest backing down in the face of superior British military prowess, lest it be accused of treason by the others. The Argentines are consoling themselves with the rationalization that they were not so much bested in a battle they stupidly brought upon themselves as they were tricked by a vast international conspiracy that no one will blame them for not defeating. So the fighting, and the dying, will go on.

But must the United States stand by silently while the British mop up, at no small additional cost to themselves, the Argentine ture of this war that, even as they appear to be winning, the British are increasingly fearful that they are not being properly appreciated either for their sacrifices or for the universal validity of the principles in whose name they are fighting. But it is also notable that the British have seemed surprisingly indifferent to the costs they expect their friends to bear. We have in mind especially the escalating diplomatic costs the United States is bearing in Latin America as a result of abandoning the relatively safe position of gobetween or would-be peacemaker and supporting Britain against Argentine aggression.

If this consideration does not weigh heavily on London at the moment, cannot the British see that they are going to need the Latins themselves? Who else is available to help provide the interim administration that is the only alternative to the reimposition of Britain's imperial sway, which is surely out of the question? The nearer the British get to victory, in short, the more they need to shape a position that allows Latin nations to find roles in a permanent solution. Unquestionably, this includes Argentina. The United States cannot be expected to neglect defenders of Port Stanley? It is a notable fea- its own interests in the hemisphere after the military campaign ends.

West New Guinea

John G. Stoessinger's article about United Nations forces (IHT, May 26) is misleadingly inaccurate about West New Guinea. The United Nations did not administer it "while the issue of sovereignty was being worked out" — the issue had already been decided. And there was no plebiscite in May. 1963, or at any other time.

Nobody, he says, has heard of the place since 1963. Nobody at Hunter College, maybe, Nobody in the UN Political Affairs Division, which Mr. Stoessinger headed from 1967 to 1974? Did nobody there notice the General As-sembly debate in 1969 — a year when there was more fighting in West New Guinea than usual. and when many of its people fled to the eastern half of the island?

For West New Guinea to serve "a striking analogy" for the Falklands problem, the whole record would have to be falsified.

1932: Balancing the U.S. Budget

WASHINGTON - Twelve bours after President Hoover had made an imperative personal appeal for action, the Senate passed a $1,200 million revenue bill to balance the budget for the fiscal year of 1932-33 and put at rest the uneasiness of the nation over the government's fiscal affairs. Only by heroic measures, which included an increase in income taxes in some instances as high as 150 percent, and the contemplated slashing of salaries of federal employees by 10 percent for those earning $2,500 or less, did the Seoate rise to meet the president's demand that "democracy must show its ability to act" and "give ample proof to the world of its ability to meet its emergencies by any sacrifice."

The Promethean fire could be contained, first in Europe and then by example around the globe.

Yet in the end, Palme and his close ally

Egon Bahr, who was Brandt's negotiator of the Ostpolitik treades, were unable to con-vince the others that a European nuclearfree zone was an acceptable proposition.

At least three counter-currents were at work. First, there was the awareness of the commission members that they could easily — and maybe not too inaccurately, given-their lopsided representation — be caricatured as a clique of the Socialist International and dismissed by much of U.S. opinion.

Second, there was the awareness in a group of veteran politicians, many of whom had experienced at first hand the great bopes and itter disappointments of the Carter era, that it is no use pushing forward with a cause if a broad constituency is not behind you. Investing one's best years in negotiating SALT-2 only to see its horse fall at the last fence had sobered oot just Cy Vance and his friend, David Owen, but the Third World represent-

Its Westerners might be out of office but Arbatov was not, and be had to clear what be was going to put his name to at the highest level. If Arbatov was on a tight rein, then self-discipline had to work to put the Westerners on a tight rein. It was not their job to give Moscow propaganda opportunities. A McGeorge Bundy-type essay on the dangers of Pershing-2 deployment or a Robert

An Independent Commission and Its Report McNamara-type critique of "first-use" of NATO's nuclear weapons could have been exploited in deadly fashion.

The danger in this situation was that the commission's report would end up mealy-mouthed and inconsequential. It is not.

Two of its proposals alone were worth the days and nights of turgid meetings. One, on a battlefield nuclear weapons-free zone in Europe, and a second, on strengthening the collective security procedures of the United Nations, could work to calm critical points of tension. At the same time, they have the vir-tue of being eminently reasonable not just to worldly-wise negotiators but also to small-town voters in Oklahoma or military staff officers in Buenos Aires or Moscow.

At the commission's final meeting in April, it looked until the last moment as if the Russians might not sign these two proposals. The first they considered inconsequential compared with the need for limitations on strategic and medium-range missiles. The second demanded of them agreement to a "concordat" among the permanent members of the Security Council that would allow a combination of anticipatory, preventive and enforcement peacekeeping opera ward, insulated from the use of the veto.

The Russians did sign. The report is unanimous. It is a document that, while not setting the Potomac or the Moscow River on fire, will provide a handbook that ordinary mortals can read and understand, pointing toward ways of controlling, diminishing and outlawing the world's oversupply of weapons of war and propensity for conflict. All commissions have their low points and high days. The former are better overlooked. Not to be forgotten, however, was Olof Palme's observation as we stood in the museum at Hiroshima just before Christmas. We had been shown the stone steps which, at the moment of explosion of the first nuclear bomb used in war, had bad engraved into them the shadow of the man who had been sitting there. "One wonders," Palme said, "wbether this will be the fate of the entire buman race if this madness of the arms race continues — to be no more than a buman shadow imprinted on a stone step."

Versailles: Just a Lavish Puppet Show at a Royal Museum?

PARIS — In the seven years since annual international economic summit meetings began at the initiative of French Presiat the initiative of French Fresi-dent Valéry Giscard d'Estaing, the results have always seemed to fall short of the buildup. The level of usefulness bas gone down as the cost of the meetings has gone up. Next weekend's meeting in Ver-sailes of the French U.S., British, West German Italian, Innances

West German, Italian, Japanese and Canadian heads of government will be by far the most gran-diose and pretentious yet beld in terms of setting, physical opulence, arrangements and expense. lectual powers. It was not the kind of conversational setting in which President Ford was apt to shine.

Yet a taste for summitry was born at Rambouillet. Ford liked the idea well enough to propose that he entertain his colleagues at a second meeting conveniently timed for the 1976 presidential election campaign, thus giving a boost to his foreign-policy image. After Jimmy Carter was elected.

he immediately named a special assistant with the sole function of preparing for summit meetings. Carter was a president who sub-merged himself in briefing papers, and his approach to summitry meant that the other heads of gov-ernment more or less had to follow along his organizational lines.

Accordingly, the Giscard concept of a "free exchange of ideas and views" gave way to the Carter concept of a meeting carefully structured by six months of preparation. Indeed, ooe of the problems the other beads of govern-ment found with Carter at the four summits he attended was that you could have a "meeting of briefs' with him but no meeting of minds.

"He was incapable of letting himself go and telling you what he truly felt and thought, how he looked at things," a European participant has said. Jimmy Carter "couldn't, or at least he wouldn't, share ideas or open up, ever."

The summit trail led to London in 1977, Bonn in 1978, Tokyo in 1979, Venice in 1980 and Ottawa in 1981. At each step of the way sterile in atmosphere and results. The heads of government look Versailles will certainly be a feast for color television, even if it fails to produce much news. But when it is all over there will be the same mutterings from the officials who do the preparatory work: Why go on with these summits? What can they ever accomplish? What purpose do they serve? The short answer is that the heads of government like summit meetings. They like playing host to their peers, trying to outdo one another in hospitality and arrangements, and being in the televisioo spotlight for their citizen-voters and the rest of the world. President François Mitterrand will put on the eighth in this series in the biggest and most lavish royal-palace-museum in the world. To get ready for it, he has had bilater-al meetings with every other participating head of government.

freewheeling exchange on world problems, particularly economic problems, and he wants to stick to prepared briefs and not have to deal with surprises. Unfortunately, no amount of preparatory work can gloss over the fact that the basic agenda of this 1982 meeting is a whole wastebasket full of unresolved problems, many of which have been going on for seven years or longer. The U.S. attitude toward the value of the dollar and intervention in exchange markets is the oldest argument on the summit table. With it this time is another argument, one that dominated the Ottawa discussions - high American interest rates. Then there is the argument, also featured at Ottawa, about shaping a more positive policy toward the Third World. In Ottawa the Americans due to start later in the year.

The Reagan team would like to see minimal discussion of well-prepared briefs and maximum agree-ment on a communiqué drafted and circulated several weeks ago.
Mitterrand, rather wistfully, would like everybody to put aside the briefs at some point and join him in a philosophical conversa-tion about the state of the world about Western values, so to speak, instead of Western credits for the Soviet Union. And Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's war in the South Atlantic will have everybody preoccupied. Also, it is a pretty good bet that when they depart from Versailles, the U.S. dollar will be fluctuating as much as ever on the exchange markets and American interest rates will still not have been talked down. We can rest assured that, come

PORT MORESBY, Papua New Guinea — This country's leaders have interrupted the last days of their national election campaigning to plan a response to border incidents in which Indonesian troops allegedly crossed into Papua New Guinea in search of rebel bands.

Premier Sir Julius Chan, who is struggling to stave off defeat by former Premier Michael Somare in Saturday's polls, met with Defense Minister Gerega Pepena and senior military officers in Wewak Monday to discuss border security.

The government claims that a small group of Indonesian troops had crossed into its territory four times in the past two weeks.

The government alleged they had questioned villagers on the whereabouts of Free Papua rebels who are waging guerrilla resistance to Indonesian control over Irian Jaya, as the western half of the is-land of New Guinea is known. The Indonesians are allegedly searching for a group of Free Pa-puans who raided a sawmill in Indonesian territory in October.

Although the clashes had little to do with Lebanon's many conflicts - reports indicated that they involved a personal vendetta - they dramatized the difficulties Mr. Butros was speaking of. One difficulty is the refusal of the United States to deal directly with the Palestine Liberation Or ganization, whose 15,000 armed guerrillas are a major part of the Lebanese conflict. Washington pledged to Israel in 1975 that it would avoid dealing with the PLO until it recognizes the Jewish state and its right to exist.

Another, Mr. Butros said, is the absence of Soviet involvement in an effort to arrange peace among the three parties, two of which — Syria and the PLO — have close nes with Moscow. "The Soviet Union exists in the area, directly or through proxies or friends," be said. "Any solution cannot dodge a minimum of understanding be-tween the two superpowers. PEKING — An American has for investigation of alleged theft of Chinese state secrets, a U.S. Embassy spokesman said Tuesday.

The spokesman said Lisa Wichser, 28, was detained Friday and is being held in the Peking area, but gave few details. The de-tention of Miss Wichser is believed to be the first of an American since diplomatie relations were estab-lished between China and the United States three years ago.

The Chinese Foreign Ministry confirmed that Miss Wichser had been detained, saying in a state-ment that she "violated Chinese laws by engaging in activities that are incompatible with her status." A spokesman would not specify the alleged illegal activities.

A U.S. Embassy statement said her detention "relates to the theft of state secrets. We are aware that this bas a broader interpretation in Chinese society than it would have in our own." Virtually anything not published or announced by the Chinese government can be considered a state secret.

A Chinese economics journal editor recently was sentenced to five years in prison for revealing state secrets to a foreigner. He re-portedly told a journalist the time, place and agenda of a Communist Party Central Committee meeting.

Miss Wichser is a graduate of the University of Denver in Colo-rado and a candidate in China for a doctoral degree in agricultural economics. Foreign sources who know her said she speaks Chinese and had a number of highly placed Iriends helping her with her re-search. They speculated she may have accumulated economic data the government regarded as sensitive or simply not for publication.

In the case of the Chinese editor and a similar one in which a Chinese citizen was jailed for 15 years, the foreigners involved were never punished, arrested nor even questioned by police. A knowledgeable Chinese source suggested that Miss Wichser was taken into custody in this case because it "would be unfair not to" if Chinese officials had been arrested.

Engaged to Chinese Man

Foreign sources also said Miss Wichser was engaged to Yi Xiegong a senior international economics student, whom she had asked government permission to marry. Although officially allowed, such marriages have been strongly discouraged. On Dec. 10, 1965, Graham produced a show at the Fillmore Auditorium featuring three bands with local reputations — The Jef-ferson Airplane, The Warlocks (who later became the Grateful Dead), and Great Society, with Grace Slick. "T've often thought we were all born in 1965," he said.

Every time I'd meet a musician he'd tell me about another great band: 'Man, you ought to book Paul Butterfield out of Chicago.' According to Graham, the Stooes are one of the few white bands who had that sensual urgen-cy from the beginning and perhaps the only one to have kept it. So when they asked him to be tour manager, he jumped at the chance. He describes the combination of physical chaos, logistical complica-tions, multimillion-dollar financial transactions and security problems that surround a six-week series of concerts as: "Missioo impossible, it's the French Foreign Legion."

With sly, wry humor but without disdainful sniffs he recounts the case of a young woman who mistakenly believes her charms are invincible. She sets her cap for a mild-mannered lawyer who politely but firmly evades her grasp. Having made up her stuhborn mind to haul him to the altar she pursues him with single-minded ardor, but her subterfuges, trickeries and tears are of no avail. Though she is presented as a hluestocking she has not read La Rochefoucauld, who perceived that even in the most harmonious love affairs one loves more than the other, but neglected to add that in most love affairs it is one who does all the loving. This information would not have sided her campaign, but it would have deterred her from being so ridiculously persistent.

Rohmer's scenario is really a series of duclogues - the young woman's abrupt farewell to her painter beau, her announcement of her marital intentions to her warning mother, her confidences to a girlfriend and her circuitous advances to the man she has chosen. Aware that the movie public looks hat never listens for long, he has interrupted the conversations with train trips and short promenades, hot cinematically his film has a still-life aspect. telligence threats from friendly nations, however, lies in controlling those threats without damaging important relationships that allow U.S. intelligence agencies to share data collected overseas by the foreign services. Said Mr. Keuch: "Our intelligence agencies always get very concerned and come in and say, 'If you're going to stop them from doing that, they're going to stop helping us'."

Obtaining weapons and swaying public opinion have been only part of Taiwan's intelligence efforts in the United States. U.S. officials say other efforts have been directed at secretly funding political demonstrations in the United States and monitoring dissident Taiwanese nationals, especially on college campuses.

Concern about the security of Taiwanese nationals was rekindled last summer after the death under suspicious circumstances of a popular Taiwanese scholar teaching at Pittshurgh's Carnegie-Mellon Uni-cheng, died during a visit to Taipei after he was detained for a marathon interrogation session by the national security police. An official Taiwanese government investigation ruled Mr.

versity. The professor, Chen Wen-

Chen's death to be an accident or saicide, but the inquiry also re-vealed that he was mortally wounded in a fall from a Taiper hullding after he had been interrogated for 13 hours about his political activities in the United States.

Although the United States has officially ended diplomatic relations with Taiwan, the island government maintains eight diplomatic and commercial missions in the United States under a bilateral agreement completed in 1979. U.S. officials say Taiwanese intelligence agents worked assidu-ously on Capitol Hill during nego-tiations on that agreement to raily support from sympathetic con-gressmen, such as Sen. Barry M. Goldwater, Republican of Ari-zona, and then-Sen. Richard Stone, Democrat of Florida, who today is a registered foreign agent for Taiwan.

These relationships extend be-yond Capitol Hill and are deeply rooted by Cold War military assistance and 30 years of intelligence liaison between Taiwan and the United States.

U.S. Study Finds Major Problems With Defense Language Institute

By Fred M. Hechinger New York Times Service NEW YORK — The Defense

Language Institute, once considered a pioneer in the teaching of foreign languages, has been re-viewed by the General Accounting Office, the investigative arm of Congress, and found deficient in management, priorities and per-It has, the office's report said, spent 159 man-years and $4.2 mil-lion to improve the quality of its courses without producing the necessary basic teaching materials.

According to testimony taken for the report, "staffing priorities were so erratic that realistic planning was meaningless.

The review was initiated by Rep. Leon E. Panetta, Democrat of California, who had been a member of the President's Commission on Foreign Language and Interna-tional Studies. The institute's resident courses are taught at Mon-terey, Calif., and at Lackland Air Force Base in Texas, and nonresident instruction is given at many

The institute had its modest start in 1941 as the outgrowth of an Army intelligence course. By the mid-1960s it was training as many as 2,500 persons from all branches of the armed services at its Monterey center alone, and in those golden days its faculty was producing textbooks, tapes and even films for use in sophisticated language laboratories. At the height of the Vietnam War, each year it graduated 1,000 students of Vietnamese with a working vocab-ulary of at least 1,000 words. Currently, the institute provides training in 37 major languages and dialects to members of all the armed services. The institute's staff consists of 350 military personnel and a civilian force of 850, of whom about 600 are faculty members. It teaches about 3,500 students a year, the majority of whom are sent by the Army. The six larg-est departments are Russian, Ger-man, Korean, Chinese, Arabic and Spanish, which together account for more than 90 percent of the faculty and students.

What made Monterey the pride of the military and the envy of many civilian and college foreign language departments was its use of what was then a relatively new approach - total immersion in the new language. English was out-lawed, most instructors were natives of the country whose lan-guage they taught, and instruction included local history and customs, and often even the native cu-

It is not clear what lead to the program's apparent decline. The fact is that the accounting office found that "weaknesses in the resident language training system of DLI affect the quality of trained linguists." It also reported that an office of academic dean has been created only within the past year.

The report's specific criticisms include: failure to set priorities and to monitor and evaluate the effectiveness of courses; lack of attentioo to the availability of commercially produced teaching mate-rials and little, if any, production of new texts by the faculty; "errat-ic" priorities in staffing; lack of proper record keeping; lack of "an officially approved and accepted teaching methodology."

Since 1976, the report charges, the institute has "not had a single cohesive policy document" to ex-plain its objectives and standards. A 1979 report had observed that course materials, some already 27 years old, "desperately needed at-tention," but by 1980, not a single new course had been completed.

Although other government agencies, such as the Foreign Ser-vice Institute, use commercial texts in language training, the defense institute staff said available books were addressed to a different audience and lacked "military flavor." The report concludes that "existing basic courses have deteriorated mental effect on the quality of training.

In commenting on the report, the Defense Department said that many of the GAO's criticisms were already on the way to being corrected. It said that course developent would begin to show results this year, beginning with comple-tion of a new basic Russian course, and that new quality controls were being installed.

Among the recommendations of the GAO are: more effective and less costly use of commercial texts, establishment of standard metho-, dology and better training for newly hired instructors, better supervision and greater accountability language proficiency test.

The issue is more important than internal disagreements between government agencies. From a defense point of view, the importance of a military language teaching program is heightened in a itry whose civilian educations systems have never produced adequate language training.

Problem

Pan Am invented airborne luxury.

It is difficult for us to imagine today the thrill of flying on the China Clipper from San Francisco back in 1935. The eighteen hours to Hawaii was considered a miracle, spanning the Pacific in three days impossible.

But all the passengers were well provided for by attentive stewards in specially designed uniforms.

The passengers dined from tables covered in linen. The plates were fine china and the silver was real.

Fresh food was taken on board in Honolulu and passengers chose between fresh pineapple and French pastries as the China Clipper chased the sun across the Pacific.

Yes, First Class Service on Pan Am today is quite an experience.

Pan Am's First Class seat may be the most comfortable in the sky.

The idea behind our Sleeperette® seat service is not new. The first one appeared in our Constellations in 1949 when it took 23 hours to fly between Europe and the U.S. And while the concept is not new its high level of comfort is.

There are enough angles in it to support whatever it is you wish to do—spread out and work, or stretch out and relax.

Should you be fortunate enough to experience this seat of seats, notice the smile that comes to your face as you settle into precisely the right position.

Mercantile House to Buy U.S. Firm

LONDON — Mercantile House, a money brokerage, said Tuesday it had agreed to acquire Oppenheimer Holdings, a New York securities firm, for about £91 million ($163 million).

Mercantile said the agreement calls for the company to issue 6.2 million new Mercantile ordinary shares plus paying $115.8 million io cash. Oppenheimer & Co., a private U.S. investment partnership, owns 80 percent of Oppenheimer holdings. Electra Investment Trust of London holds 20 percent.

Malaysian Estates Pact Completed

LONDON --- Malaysia and controlling shareholder Harrisons & Cros-LONDON — Malaysia and controlling shareholder Harrisons & Crosfield have have agreed on a plan to give Malaysia control of Harrisons Malaysian Estates, the company said Tuesday. Under the plan, Harrison & Crosfield's 80.8-percent interest in Harrisons Malaysian Estates will be reduced while HME will transfer its tax residence to Malaysia.

The statement said the plan will tovolve the acquisition in exchange for shares of all HME's share capital by a new Malaysian company, Harrisons Malaysian Plantations. HME shareholders will have the right to receive cash instead of shares for part of their holding. Harrisons & Crosfield is choosing the cash alternative for all of its stake in HME.

Dassault Says Orders Strong

PARIS — Benno Vallieres, chairman of Dassault aircraft company, said Tuesday that his group has received orders worth 13 billion francs ($2.1 billion) since Jan. 1 in spite of a fierce international competition. He told the defense committee of the National Assembly that the new orders amounted to a third of all foreign orders received by French armament exporters in 1981.

Mr. Vallieres said the Dassault group was determined to go ahead with construction of the Mirage-4000 twin-jet fighter because "several Middle Eastern nations" - which be did not name - were interested in buying it. He said the plane will be built even though the French Air Force has decided not to purchase it for financial reasons.

Airbus Industrie Awaits Delta Word

NEW YORK - An order by Delta Airlines would be an "extremely important" factor to determining whether Airbus Industrie will produce the proposed Airbus A-320 jet but it is not essential to launching the project, Pierre Pailleret, Airbus Senior Vice President, said Tuesday.

Mr. Pailleret said in an interview that the European consortium has received no indication of Delta's decision on whether to purchase the 150-seat jet but that he believed the airline was "satisfied" with its pro-

Delta also has asked Boeing for a proposal for an aircraft of a similar size, he said. Mr. Pailleret said Airbus expects to decide this year whether to proceed with the $2-billion program. He said Air France has placed firm orders for 25 of the planes and it has options for 25 more.

Alsthom Plans 2-for-5 Rights Issue

PARIS - Alsthom-Atlantique said Tuesday that it plans to raise its capital from 380.2 million francs ($61.6 million) to 532.3 million francs through a rights issue of two new 70-franc nominal shares for five old ones. Aisthom, which is majority-owned by the recently nationalized Générale d'Electricité, was quoted Tuesday at 168 francs on the Bourse.

Socal Pulls Out of Fructose Project

BERKELY; Calif. — Cetus Corn said Standard Oil of California had withdrawn from its joint project for the development of a commercial process for the production of fructose. Cetus said it will be entitled to all technology developed by the two companies. It said it plans to proceed with development of the technology.

Life in Private Sector To Challenge BNOC

GLASGOW - The setting was a modern meeting room in an equally modern office building here, and the agenda was a discussion with reporters of last year's results of the British National Oil Corp., just the sort of news conference that usually follows an annual meeting. But for the moment, BNOC has oo shareholders meeting. But for the moment, BNOC has oo shareholders and, hence, no annual meeting.

"Next year," Philip Shelbourne, the company's chairman, told the journalists during the recent meeting, "we hope to have some shareholders, plus you.

Created in 1976 to develop North Sea oil oo behalf of Britain, BNOC (often called BEE-knock in the industry) has been stateowned since its inception, in keeping with a cooviction that Brit-ain's most precious natural resource should be developed for the

But at least one prominent Briton - Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher - has little desire for a state-owned oil company, and if all goes according to her plan, a 51-percent interest to all of BNOC except its trading arm will be sold to the public this fall. More sales of shares by the government could follow.

Britoil and the Future

At the time the 51-percent interest is sold, a new company, Britoil, will be formed to conduct the exploration, development and production now in the hands of BNOC. Mr. Shelbourne is expected to become chairman of Britoil.

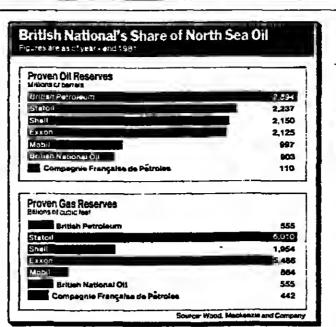

A far smaller British National Oil Corp. will remain as a state owned middleman in trading domestically produced British oil, a function that even Mrs. Thatcher agrees is important to insure that British oil is available to Britain in times of need.

The sale represents just one part of Mrs. Thatcher's strategy to sell large parts of government-owned companies to the public, but it constitutes by far the largest element and has drawn considerable criticism from the opposition Labor Party.

The Laborites say that it is wrong to grant to the private sector any measure of control over such a crucial resource as oil. They make this argument despite the fact that the plan by the ruling Conservative Party would prevent individual parties from holding large blocks of Britoil shares.

From its start six years ago, BNOC has taken on 2,300 employees - mostly in Scotland - and for 1981, it reported sales of £5.7 billion ($10.4 billion) and profits of £76.6 million. Although revenue rose 33 percent, profit declined from £117.2 million in 1980 because of the imposition of an additional tax on North Sea oil by a government eager to reduce its budget deficit.

S. T. Marie and

But the future remains murky: Prospects in the North Sea for BNOC and for private companies have become decidedly less at-tractive to the past year. From a peak of $39 a barrel a year ago, the price for North Sea oil has dropped to $31. But effective Tuesday, Britain raised its price $2.50 a barrel, to $33.50.

Nor has much tax relief been forthcoming. In March, the Thatcher government revised the North Sea tax structure to abolish the supplementary duty at the end of the year. Oil company executives say, however, that the new levy will not affect their

Austria's Economy Viewed With Uneasiness

Austria, which serves as a base of operations for many big West-ern corporations, has traditionally had strong trade ties with Eastern bloc countries because of its geographic location. # J.S. Industry Beginning to Get a Boost From Reagan Arms Buildup

By Winston Williams New York Times Service CHICAGO - The first ripples the Reagan administration's mittary buildup are reaching the ustion's factories.

At the huge Northrop Defense systems plant in Rolling Meadows, Ill. for example, the suppany has doubled its manufacaring space in the last two years. R has spent millions of dollars on pment, its sales have tripled and its employee rolls have nown by 26 percent, to 2,500.

Significantly, however, the growth in employment at Horhrop and at other military rights has slowed, except for engi-iners and other technical person-pel, and it is not expected to pick in again for eight to 10 months. In other ways, too, the full impact of the $1,500-billion, five-year buildup will not be felt for some time. Opponents of large military budgets have often complained that arms spending creates few jobs. They also argue that large budgets are inflationary because they push up the prices of critical raw materials and skilled labor while creating shortages and bottlenecks. Some critics argue also, that arms spending "crowds out" investment in commercial

But the rising military expendi-tures, analysts believe, will have only a slight effect on the unemployment rate. The Pentagoo expects the military-related iodus-tries to add about 350,000 workers by 1984, bringing contractor employment to 2.86 million, About a million related jobs would be created by what economists call the "multiplier effect."

Honeywell advanced technology cuts energy costs in your building

Advanced technology is the key to reducing energy consumption. Honeywell has it. Micro-electronic and micro-processor based. We apply it in space to the Columbia Space Shuttle and here on earth to reduce your energy costs.

Saved energy through conservation is the cheapest and most readily available source of alternative energy. Our technology lets you tap this source. Right now. It offers you the opportunity to reduce the energy used in your building or building complex by as much as 15 to 30%.

No matter how new or old, large or small; no matter what function.

Our highly advanced micro-electronic building controls and systems are inexpensive. Amortisation of installations can be as little as six months and rarely exceed two years.

Of course, your energy and cost savings go on and on. Seeing is believing. So let us show you exactly how Honeywell can cut building energy costs significantly. Including a dossier full of impressive case histories.

1981 Results

At the annual general meeting on April 28, 1982, chaired by Michel Freyche, Chairman of the Bank, assisted by Albert Bouvier, General Manager, 8FCE's shareholders heard the reports of the 80ard of Directors and of the auditors, and approved the year-end -1981 balance sheet and income statement as well as the recommended appropriation of the year's results.

 Total consolidated assets of the bank at December 31, 1981 stood at F 188.8 billion, an advance of 18.2% in comparison to 1980 and four points higher than the 1980 increase recorded in 1979.

Aggregate banking uses and loans to customers rose by F 11,099,000,000 to F 50.2 billion, 27,7% higher than the figure of 1980. Loans to customers were 14.8% higher with a percentage of operations in foreign currencies climbing from 28.3 to 31.9%.

Financing of short, medium and long term exports requiring BFCE intervention expanded by F 16,365 million to F122.5 billion marking an increase of 15.4%. Taking into account the portion of such credits included off balance sheet as commitments, the whole Increase was 21.4% of which 13.8% can be attributed to the short term, 19.3% to the medium term and 36.2% to the long term. The increase is attributable primarily to purchaser credits, due to a sharp upturn in capital goods contracts which began last year.

• The income statement reflects gross operating income 20.5% above the preceding year. While French franc credit market operations were adversely affected by credit restrictions and deteriorating refinancing conditions on the money market, the foreign currency operations benefitted from the dollar's rise and the growing contribution of the foreign branches. Signature and service transactions also continued to show satisfactory progress.

 After the customary provisions including F 7,000,000 for the profit-sharing plan, F 29,000,000 for income taxes and substantially higher appropriation for operating provisions in respect of worsening general economic conditions and the financial situation of certain countries, the net profit was F 56,539,000 down 6.5% from the previous year. A dividend was declared at the rate of 7.5% plus tax credit, as in 1980, and taking into account the legal reserve reached its maximum last year, F 12,400,000 million were appropriated to the general reserve as against F7,000,000 in

He traces influences, friendships, infatuations, and parallels between Hardy's life and work, He tells us about Hardy's reading, his tastes in recreation, his travels, his work habits, his conception of the two levels of society - low and high - in which he eventually moved. Even Millgate's description of the house that Hardy eventually built for himself is immensely revealing. After the ever-greens he had planted as a windbreak grew tall enough to shroud the house

THOMAS HARDY

By Michael Millgate. Illustrated. 637 pp. $25. Random House, 201 East 50th Street, New York, N.Y. 10022.

Reviewed by Anatole Broyard

As Michael Miligate observes in this splendid biography, Thomas Hardy seriously hampered his literary career by insisting in his novels on a realism and a pessimism that defied the conventions of Victorian fiction. A man with a minimum of sexual experience, he nevertheless wrote almost modern novels of sexual incompatibility. The famous—or for the critics, infamous—pig-slaughtering scene in "Inde the Obscure," in which Jude and his slattern. ly wife dismember the carcass is like a dismembering of the body of marriage itself Yet Hardy could not see that he was wrong. He wrote out of the experience of his life and no critic can argue a man out of his life. Besides, his pessimism was part of his power. It enabled him to see beyond the surface of a society that had one of the most resolute veneers of any time in history. Hardy's bleakness went to the bone in an age when even planes were not all an age when "jess". not allowed to have "legs."

The son of a Dorset stonemason, Hardy was too frail for the work and was apprenticed to an architect where he specialized in the Gothic restorations that were then much in vogue. We can see his family's trade and Hardy's own in "Jude the Obscure" and "The Laodiceans." Born in one of the leading and tract leading and the loneliest and most backward parts of Dorset, Hardy seems to have taken to privacy and to antiquity as much as to landscape. Although his father and mother could read and write, Hardy's feeling for the land came very close to that of a peasant's.

Resistance to Innovation

His first novel, "The Poor Man and the Lady," was rejected by a number of publishers who all found it "powerful" in spite of — or because of — its blumtness and lack of conventional polish. Almost pathetically willing at first to try to please, Hardy set about writing more conventionally in "Desperate Remedies," his first published novel, and even gaily in "Under the Greenwood Tree." Though these first two books were well enough received.

few modern readers turn to them now.
"Far From the Madding Crowd," the love story of a headstrong woman farmer and a shepherd with a philosophical cast of mind, was Hardy's first major success. Despite its tragic beginning and a few grisly scenes, it boasted a happy ending. Hardy was no longer young, nor was she, when he married Emma Gifford, with whom he was to spend a lifetime of unhappiness, Though little is known of their intimacy, their life as witnessed by most observers was one more buttress for Hardy's pessi-Reviews were brutal and personal

It is one of the paradoxes of Hardy that he was an innovator in literature and a pas-sionate conservator of old customs at the same time. Millgate is the kind of biographer in darkness, Hardy, as if submitting to ... a remorseless fate, refused to have them trimmed.

Unlike his own heroes, and in spite. of the critics, Hardy died rich, loved and famous, well into his 80s. Though he was a modern, even a revolutionary writer in his time, most of us read him now as a lyrical pastoralist. It may be a sign of the times that some of us take his books to bed, as if even his pessimistic vision was one that enabled us to sleep soundly.

WHEN experts play with inexperiwe enced players, eyebrows— and blood pressure, too—tend to rise. In general, the experts make a valiant effort to restrain themselves and save their borror stories to tell the other experts later.

Nevertheless, an eccentric action by a novice can sometimes point the partnership in the direction of a good score. This happened on the di-agramed deal. However, the other novice at the table saved his partnership from the impending bad score with an eccentricity of his own.

The analysis sheet distributed to the players after the game predicted that East would open in third position with one diamond. It discussed the problem then presented to North, who should really stay out of the auction, and suggested that North-South would have trouble locating the heart

This projection was immediately shot down at one table and probably at others, when West opened with three clubs. The expert, West's bid might well have been passed out, going down three tricks for a moderate score. But the novice in the North seat made an extraordinary take-out double. This action would normally show the values for an opening bid, but here North put his partnership on a good track. South was ready to pass the double for penalties, collecting a probable 500 instead of 150.

This action and the sequel demonstrate that the novice players do not like to pass if they can think of anything to bid. East was in a situation in which experts world pass, knowing it to be unlikely that they could improve on three clubs as a contract. But East bid three diamonds.

This was an improvement on three clubs in more than one respect. Three diamonds would have failed by a trick or two, which was better than three clubs would have done.

East escaped the impending ax, for South's enthusiasm for defending clubs did not extend to diamonds. He tried three no-trump, and East's three-diamond bid had turned North's dooble into a liability rather than an as-

Against three no-trump, West led a diamond, and East correctly played the jack. South won and led the spade king, taken with the ace by East who shifted to his singleton club. West won and shifted back to diamonds. East made another good ducking play, and when he regained the lead with the spade queen he cashed three diamond tricks for down two and a good score.

Wilander, the 17-year-old Swede who bounced Ivan Lendl oo Sunday, used his steady baseline game to prove the first rule of tennis: Get the ball back.

Gerulaitis, the No. 5 seed, was his usual aggressive self, serving and volleying well. He was beaten largely because of Wilander's ability to meet those volleys with po- taken the advantage. She lost the tent passing shots.

"I played the percentages, but it didn't work," said Gerulaitis, who beat Wilander earlier this year in Brussels. "He played about the same today, but the court helped him here. He played a good, solid match."

Gerulaitis said he was particu-larly impressed with Wilander's backhand. "The way be railies with it shows it's a little more flexible than his forehand."

In Gerulaitis, ranked ninth in the world, Wilander had an opponent far different from Lendi, who stays back for the long rallies. "If my passing shots had not worked today," Wilander said, "it would have been difficult."

'- Boring'

Wilander, the 1981 French juniors champion, said he expected to play Clerc as he did Lendl. "I think it will be the same kind of game - boring," he said.

Mandlikova, ranked fifth in the world and seeded fifth here, served for the match twice at 6-5 in the second set. She lost the first match point by backhanding into the net and the second by double-faulting, but kept the game alive by delivering two aces after Austin had twice game by sending a foreband too long, and then dropped the tie-

"I had been close to beating Tracy before," Mandlikova said, recalling how she had taken the first set, 6-1, two years ago at East-bourne, England. "Maybe that's why I was so nervous."

Austin, who had defeated Mandlikova eight times previous-ly, has said that the hardest part of coming back to tennis after more than four months without a tournament was the mental conditioning. And although Mandlikova was sharp in the final set. Austin's uncharacteristic errors indicated a lack of brainpower.

"I don't think I concentrated too well," Austin acknowledged. But that was to be expected after the layoff. I made a lot of errors, but just playing this tournament will help me.

Predictably, the match was a contest of Mandlikova's magic her chips, slices, drop shots and other surprises — against Austin's ability to track down the ball and wait for an error from the other

"She tries for such low-percentage shots," Austin remarked.
"She's going to miss some of them, but she's going to make some.

Austin said, however, that she would not bet oo Mandlikova's winning the tournament again, explaining that the task of getting past Navratilova and then either Andrea Jaeger or Chris Evert Lloyd in the final would probably be too much for her. Mandlikova, too, missed much of the winter circuit with an injury.

If peer assessment is reliable, it is worth noting that Evert was saying much the same thing the other day. "Martina's mentally strong-er," she said. "I would be surprised if Hana made the final. I think she has lost confidence because she has lost a lot of matches lately. I don't think she believes she can win this tournament.

More confident is Clerc, whose victory over McNamara put him in the semifinals for the second straight year. Playing what was probably his best match in weeks, the No. 3 seed dominated his Australian opponent from the outset. He kept McNamara on the defensive, and afforded him little opportunity to come to the forecourt and go for the point.

"I was well prepared for the match because I've played him many times," said Clerc, who was not so well prepared in the first round, when he was taken to five sets by a French junior player.

McNamara said he was not tired physically but might have been a little mentally drained. It was un-derstandable. To reach the quarters, he had to defeat Henri Leconte, the 1980 French juniors champion, and then Harold Solomon, Tomas Smid and Andres Gomez. Each of those matches went at least four sets.

McNamara said he was frustrat. ed at not being able to pressure Clerc early enough to bother him. "He's only going to hit the ball hard if you let him," said the Australian of the Argentine who heat of sport as the bridge between peoples of diverse cultures and creeds is remote in soccer. The players are sequestered in separate, beavily guarded camps. Their militia keep out terrorists who might kidnap, fans who might pester, opponents who might spy. So they meet only on the field.

It isn't all Spain's fault. The idea

They contest 52 matches in 14 venues, and they have just one thing in common: Each player is a buman fish being magnified inside the televisioo bowl into which a billion viewers will be peering. If the soccer is allowed center

Still, the heavyweights of this World Cup — Brazil, West Germa-oy, Brazil, the Soviet Union and perhaps Spain, with ber own pasionate support — will be playing a higher game of tactical doubleth-ink, They have, if they dare to give them licence, players who can per-form with indelible style. Yet over and above whatever problems lie inside each camp's alls, the organizers have to bope and pray that certain teams avoid each other.

You may recall the machinery of last winter's World Cup "draw" — a charade that exposed the heavy hand of politics. That event, televised live, was a computerized effort to keep apart those nations whose meeting in friendly rivalry is considered unthinkable — such nations as the Soviet Union and Chile, for example, hopeful that such confrontation will be avoided. But it lurks in the background. The finalists, ostensibly the best 24 of 150 nations, are split into six groups for Round 1. A preview today of two of the groups: Group 1: Italy, Poland, Peru and Cameroon.

Intriguing, my dear Watson, Italy and Poland, expected to win the two qualifying places, are torn with inner conflict. Peru and Camerooo are outsiders happy to en-courage publicists who talk darkly of voodoos.

Italy and Poland meet in group's first match on June 14. I expect a cautious draw between nations whose cup game in 1974 left rumors of attempted Italian bribes in the air.

Dino Zoff, at 40, remains a masterful goalie. Italy relies on him, as much as on Giancarlo Antognoni, the creator now recovered from a fractured skull, and goalscorer Paulo Rossi, conveniently restored after another briber scandal. The nation's fixation with Rossi, and the burden he carries. has doubled with the loss of the injured Roberto Bettega.

Poland, of course, has powerful team, albeit one still clinging to the thrust of Grzegorz Lato and Andrzei Szarmach, who spearheaded the '74 squad. But the key man is midfielder Zbigniew Boniek, a dynamie player who will have the uneasy task of leading the side of a repressed nation against to Brazil's and, despite an aging team, has in 24-year-old Julio Cesar Uribe a goal-scoring midfielder who sometimes performs poetry in soccer boots. And Cameroon? 1 still believe African soccer players must one day emerge to seriously challenge the world. Not yet, maybe, but keep an eye on Roger Milla, the -scorer at one end, and Thomas N'kono, the goalkeeping star. Group 2: West Germany, Chile, Algeria and Austria. This time, the match between the group favorites, West Germaoy and Austria, is the group's fi-nal, on June 25. By then they should buth be home and dry and the result will be subject to the mathematics of whichever secondphase group the West Germans in particular fancy.

With Paul Breitner controlling midfield, with Karl-Heinz Rummenigge determined to prove himself indisputably the world's most effective striker and with quality throughout, West Germany is entitled to be, alongside Brazil, the tournament favorite. .

Chile has an aging oucleus in striker Carlos Caszely and defenias Figueroa, Algeria has a younger, more vigor-ous squad built around a bunch of mercenaries who play in the French league and a quick inven-tive midfield scorer, Lakhdar Belloumi, Africa's player of the year.

But even if the wiles of the Chileans and the running of the Algerians do enough to threaten West Germany's easy passage, Austria is likely to be the one solid challeng-made Sunday was designed to beat the Lakers' trapping defense. Los Angeles plays a defense as close to an illegal zone as the rules allow; the Lakers are quick and put tre mendous pressure on the ball, usually using 6-foot-9 Earvin (Magie) Johnson as a chaser.

The 76ers never adjusted in last Thursday's Game 1, and lost a 124-117 track meet. Sunday, they beat the trap and outrebounded Los Angeles, 51-39, preventing the Lakers from running.

Used Congressmen

By Russell Baker

NEW YORK — There is a nat-ural affinity between a usedcar salesman and a congressman. Neither one wants you to know what's under the hood.

For this reason there is nothing surprising about Congress' rejection of new federal rules that would have forced used-car dealers to tell their customers about serious defects in tbeir merchandise. Do coogressmen advertise the cracks in their brains? l don't think it was all those campaign donations from the . used-car lobby Baker that made Congress toss out the proposed rules. I think a surge of natural brotherly sympathy would have been enough to carry the day for America's Honest Harrys, Smilin' Sams and Upright Ulrics.

Put yourself in your congress-man's shoes. One of these days he is going to be out of office. Defeated, old, tired, 120,000 miles oo his smile and two pistons cracked in his best joke. They're going to put him out on the used-congressman

Does he want to have a sticker on him stating that he gets only eight miles on a gallon of bour-bon? That his rip-roaring anti-Communist speech hasn't had an overhaul since 1969? That his generator is so decomposed ir hasn't sparked a fresh thought in 15

You know and I know what he wants, When Happy Harvey brings a buyer over, he wants Hap-py to be able to say, "Now I've got to tell you this is a used congress-man, but he's better than oew. Had only one owner — a little old oil industry who never used him for anything except to go to church on Sundays."

I'm sympathetic to that used congressman. Having the federal government protect consumers is well and good, but there are a few areas where the consumer has traditionally been expected to fend for himself. Choosing a congress-man is ooe of these, Buying a used fied people who buy used cars along with people who handle rattlesnakes. They're people who are eager for surprises and will go out of their way to enjoy ooe. Voting for a congressman is slightly different. You know you're going to get a surprise all right, and you'd probably rather not, but good citizenship compels you to stick your hand in the box and pull the lever. Then you howl for the next two years, or next six years if I expect to howl after voting for a congressman, and I'd expect to howl if I bought a used car. People running for Congress and used-car salesmen are expected to make you howl. They're among the last few breeds left in the country who survive by their wits, and the country needs them, not only to give us something to bowl against but also to satisfy the millions afflicted

with an incurable rage to gamble.
As for the used-car salesman the legend of his chicanery has be come part of the fabric of America, like Roy Bean, the hanging judge, and P.T. Barnum, who is cherished in the American soul for having enunciated the national faith in a sucker being born every minute. By keeping alive the mem-ory of the Old West horse trader in a thousand concrete cities, the used-car dealer keeps us in touch with our roots.

I hope never to see the day when an American child will walk onto a used-car lot and be told, " wouldn't dream of taking your money kid before telling you that heap you like so much has two broken axles, a motor full of sawdust and a frame so badly beni it would take a team of elephants to align the front end." That would be almost as bad as having a congressman say, "Before voting for me, you must realize that I eheat on my wife and income tax, am oo the secret payroll of two very large corporations whose interests are not yours and heartily dislike people who can't

I think Coogress understood the importance of protecting our ancient frauds when it voted down the restrictions on used-car dealers. Of course the campaign gifts from the used-car folks probably didn't hurt, either. It belped renind both parties how much they had in common.

The Life and Works of a 'Plain Lady'

Susan Thames Pettiss' Four Decades of Helping Refugees and the Blind

By Nadine Brozan New York Times Service

NEW YORK — When Susan fifth grade in Mobile, Ala, she was asked what she would like to be when she grew up.

"My mother wasn't a circus acrobat or president of the country, so I said I would like to be a plain lady like she was." she recalled the other day.

Pettiss, who just retired as di-rector of blindness prevention for Helen Keller International because she will sooo be 70, turned out in fact to be anything but "a plain lady."

Rather, she became a witness and often a direct participant in several major historical events of the past four decades. She was in Europe when World War II ended and helped countless refugees build oew lives. She was in South Vietnam to plan for reconstruction of essential services ("after we had won the war," she said) when the Tet offensive was started by the other side. She was a student at an American university when the protests of the late 1960s erupted, and she marched in opposition to the war. She was in Afghanistan, helping establish a program to prevent blindness in children, when Soviet troops invaded.

That was not the kind of life to be expected of girls growing up in the Deep South more than half a century ago.

"The pattern was to make a debut, go to college, get married and have children," Pettiss said before going to Switzerland to speak on blindness. She graduated from the University of Alabama in 1933, was married briefly but had no chil-Coseworker

"I got our of college in the De-pression, and the only thing to do was to get a job in relief," she said. "So I worked with the Mobile Department of Public Wel-fare and with a children's casework service. I was the casework-

In 1945 she joined the UN Re-tration and was assigned to the U.S. Zone of Germany. "I was part of a team to operate the displaced persons' camps and was also oo a search committee to reunite children who had been brought to Germany from other countries with their parents," she said. "They had been deported in groups to Germany to be indoctrinated into German

She also worked with Jewish children; after the war they were being organized into groups to go to kibbutzim in Palestine.

We fed them, clothed them and then closed our eyes when we let them go illegally."

When the UN effort was disbanded in 1947, she decided to come home "to tidy up my social-work education," and she en-rolled in the New York School of Social Work at Columbia University. Then for eight years she served as a resettlement officer with the International Refugee Organization in Washington.

"That was the time during which it became obvious that the Latvians, Lithuanians and Poles were not going home, so plans had to be made. Over one million were brought to the United States all with sponsors and homes.

"Part of my job was to make plans for handicapped refugees. There were not many countries that wanted them, so we took in a significant number of blind and physically disabled people."

In one of her more bureaucratically difficult assignments, she became involved with a mission to get White Russian and Jewish refugees out of Shanghai when the Communists took over in Chi-"We got them out to Samar, an island in the Philippines, and then arranged to take them to camps in Germany," she said. But there was no American immigration office to process papers on Samar, so they had to go to the United States before proceeding to Germany. "One of my jobs was to accom-my the trains from California to the East. There is nothing compa-rable to seeing the country through the eyes of a refugee who would give anything to live here."

EMPLOYMENT

GENERAL POSITIONS

"I'm highly optimistic."

Several years later, she turned her attention to the plight of chil-dren born to women who had had liaisons with American service-

"Our agency, the Internacional Social Service, played an important role in the passage of special immigration laws permitting those children to come here for adoption while protecting them from black-market placement procedures," she said.

In 1963 she took yet another direction, joining the Department of Health, Education and Welfare as an international social-welfare adviser. On loan to the Agency for International Developmen she was appointed to the task force that went to South Vietnam in 1967 to plan for postwar rehabilitation.

"We came back after the Tet offensive, and all our recommendations for the care of the aged, the widowed, the orphaned, for day-care centers and hospitals went down the drain."

To read and think, she decided to take a year at Brandeis University and wound up getting her doctorate there. She also became an active participant in the student protests against American involvement in Vietnam.

"There I was," she said with a bemused smile, "a white-haired student marching on the Boston Common and then on Washing-xerophthalmia, a sight disease that in its advanced stage is known as nutritional blindness. Associated with malnutrition and caused by a deficiency of vitamin A, the disease strikes children be-tween the ages of 6 months and 6 years. Preventico - and in many cases reversal or at least diminution of the condition - is available through the administration twice a year of a concentrated dose of vitamin A. One dose costs less than two cents. Helen Keller International now assists three countries — Indonesia, Bangladesh and Haiti - in vitamin dis-

It is estimated more than 10 million children contract xerophthalmia each year, 5 million of them in Asia. Petriss remembers certain ones.

"It's one thing to talk about 1,000 blind children, it's another thing to look in the face of a child who may be too young to walk or talk and know that he will never be able to see his mother's face or the landscape," Asked what she sees ahead based on the past, she reflected: "I'm highly optimistic, oot about the world but about the capacity of individuals to adapt and survive. I have felt this way since working with people coming out of concentration camps, A buman being has a resiliency that ought not be underestimated."

Row at Rome Opera

Daniel Oren, the 27-year-old Israeli conductor, quit his post as music director of the Rome Opera, accusing the management of play-ing politics in hiring singers and meddling in the choice of reper-toire. "I had to put up a hard and humiliating fight against the management for every opera and con-cert I directed," Oren told a news conference. He charged that the opera's artistic director, Gioacchi-no Lanza Tomasi, refused to hire top singers, "always settling for second or third-class singers, and even that was decided by politics and not on the basis of merit." Oren also accused Tomasi of rejecting Puccini operas "which he just hates." Tomasi's office said he would not have any comment on Oren's charges "for the time being." Oren came to Rome in 1979 after winning the first prize in the Herbert von Karajan competitioo for conductors in West Berlin. The Rome Opera, like other opera houses in Italy, have been beset by financial problems and only recently it had to be bailed out by a central government grant. But Oren said financial problems did not figure in his disoute with Tomasi.

Nobel Prize winner Mother Teresa of Calcutta, accepting a $75,000 check in Washington to further her work for the needy, urged Americans to "share the joy of loving" with those less for-tunate. The check from the Southem Association of the Knights of Malta will allow Mother Teresa's Missionaries of Charity to buy two neighboring houses in Wash ton, one for a soup kitchen and the other as a residence for four nuns. A prominent poet said he would offer to resign from the faculty of Boston University after an incident in which a student at Harvard University accused him of sexual harassment. The poet, Derek Walcott, 52, was teaching a poetry workshop in November as a visit-ing professor at Harvard when, according to the student, he approached her after class, asking: Would you make love to me if I asked you?" The student, who asked not to be identified, complained to Harvard officials. She also questioned the grade of C she Somewhere in Boston there may be a statue that his Bette Davis eyes, her nose, her shoulders—and a few other similarnes. The 74-year-old actress said in an interview for Playboy magazine that she posed nude for a stame of "Spring" when she was 18. "This was after high school, when I was a very young person," she said. The actress, a native of Lowell, Mass., agreed to pose for an elderly woman sculptor whose name the no-longer remembers, she said. The actress described herself as the picture of a sad little girl, earning money for the family. I was so, modest." When it came time to leave the dressing room without her clothes, she recalled, "I was absolutely panicked. I didn't dare come out. So I finally had to go down, stark naked in front of her and the male assistant. I was mortified." ified." Davis, who has appeared in more than 30 films and has won two Academy Awards, added, "It took me years to get over it, as a matter of fact." Boston's parks and recreation commissioner, Robert McCoy, said he knows of no such statue in any Boston park.
